FROM THE CONVENER

Afganistan is again in the news. Reports from the US and British military paint a resurgence of the Taliban - for the women of Afganistan that can only mean that another force of suppression and violence is added to the array of warlords already in control of the country outside the capital. Attacks on schools for girls appear in newspaper reports, and daily injustice and oppression continue. There is other news as well. To find them, Murdoch and Fairfax are of no help; one has to search around, look at the internet, have access to the local Pakistani press. The Khewa refugee camp on the outskirts of Peshawar recently witnessed a graduation ceremony. Young Afgan students, who had lived away from their families in Afganistan to attend one of RA WA’s schools, received their graduation documents. With more and more families returning to their ruined homes the camps have been shrinking, but the lack of schools at home convinced many to leave their daughters in Khewa camp to complete their education.

When the world is made to believe that life is "returning to normal in Afganistan" SAWA’s assistance to keep RA WA’s schools, orphanages and hospitals in operation is needed more than ever. We have made good contributions in the past, but there is much need and always room for improvement. The SAWA committee has been looking at ways to boost our fundraising effort and to make our organisation more effective.

While SAWA is and will always be an organisation of dedicated volunteers and sends RA WA every dollar it can raise, we are not adverse to learning from the professional world. We do not have to define "milestones", "deliverables" and other inventions of bureaucratic terminology, but it will do us good if we set ourselves clear targets and monitor our progress against them.

The first target for 2005 will be to achieve tax deductibility. The paperwork has been set in train; the process is slow. The second target is to create a range of merchandise that can be used for fundraising. Given our financial situation we have to start small; but greeting cards, mugs and other small items will soon be available. The third target has to be to make the October visit of Amena, the RA WA member responsible for orphanages in Pakistan, an outstanding success. More about the visit can be found elsewhere in the newsletter. We have to make sure that Amena receives the widest possible exposure in the local press before her visit.

The committee will define more targets as time moves on. To put our work in perspective, let me report a few figures from "CW4WAfghan", the Canadian Women for Women in Afghanistan. CW4WAfghan began in 1999 and raised CN $26,250 in its first two years. This equates to about 28,875 Australian dollars and corresponds roughly to the amount SAWA raised during its first 12 months.

In 2001/02 and 2002/03 our Canadian friends raised about CN $250,000, and in 2003/04 over CN $460,000. This shows us what can be achieved and what kind of targets we should set ourselves in the future. Let us all work together to make SAWA a strong support group for RAWA and the Women of Afghanistan!

OLDEST RAWA MEMBER PASSES AWAY

Some of you have met Rabia in Khewa refugee camp. She was an aged woman and one of the hard working RAWA members who joined RAWA a month after Meena established it in 1977 and throughout her life accepted risks and difficulties to realize RAWA’s mission. Unfortunately she died few days ago due to heart attack in the Kheva camp. All RAWA members are in grave sorrow for the loss of our beloved Rabia. For all young RAWA members she was a kind and loving mother who was giving us courage and resoluteness in our struggle. She was from one of the most backward areas of Afghanistan called Nooristan but with her efforts and sacrifices became the voice of deprived women of her birth place.

We will remember and honour her by following her path with steadfastness and determination.

Rabia Jan
Our loving mother

RAWA

THANK YOU

Thank you to Nayano Taylor-Neumann from Murray Bridge for her continued support of the SAWAN.

RAWA TOUR OCTOBER 2005

October is shaping up to be a month to remember for Australian RAWA supporters, as Amena Shams from RAWA will be with us in Australia for most of October. Amena is in charge of RAWA’s orphanages in Pakistan and we are keen to meet her, to receive an update on the current situation for women and children in Afghanistan and Pakistan as well learn more of RAWA’s inspirational work. News of Amena’s coming tour has travelled fast and interest in Amena’s visit has been extensive. Many supporters have offered to host RAWA events and Amena will have a full timetable of information and fundraising events in Melbourne, Adelaide, Sydney and Brisbane with Lismore and other towns also holding events: public speaking forums or dinners organised by the federal Human Rights an Equal Opportunity Commission, several universities, trade unions, schools, women’s organizations and other RAWA supporters.

This is our chance to promote RAWA even further and wider. RAWA members have always had a great impact on their audiences here in Australia and we have the opportunity in October to show our support and fundraise for RAWA, whilst creating interest in ongoing funding of RAWA projects: a lifeline to so many.

U.S. FUNDS AFGHAN BUSINESSWOMEN’S FEDERATION

KABUL, June 21 (Online): A federation of the Afghan businesswomen will be established in a month with a start-up fund from the United States Agency for International Development (USAID).

Chairman of Afghanistan International Chamber of Commerce Hamid Qaderi said the USAID had promised to donate six million dollars for funding the project. He hoped the creation of the businesswomen federation would boost business concerns belonging to women besides enabling them to play a more active role in the country’s reconstruction and economic development.

Although women are currently engaged in such businesses as construction materials, carpets and agricultural products, their role is widely regarded as peripheral.

Chairperson of Afghanistan Businesswomen Council Mahbooba Waezi hailed the project as beneficial to the businesswomen community.
DANGER FOR WOMEN RUNNING FOR OFFICE

July 19, 2005 Kashar News

Soraya Parlika is one of over 500 women standing for parliament in Afghanistan. The elections, scheduled for September 18, promise to be more than usually contentious - and for the women, more than usually hazardous. Afghanistan's election law seems to smooth the path to parliament for women, guaranteeing them two seats from each of the country's 34 provinces. But in the struggle between legislation and tradition, the latter seems to be gaining the upper hand. The most conservative elements of society believe that women have no business seeking power, and that it is against Islamic tradition. Dr Shir Ali Zarifi of the Afghan Academy of Sciences says there are no religious bars preventing women from running for parliament. "Women can go to polls and run for the elections under the umbrella of Islam," he said. But there have been numerous reports of threats against women, and some cases of actual violence. One candidate had her house burned down.

In spite of the difficulties, there are still many women who are ready to battle the odds. Safia Sediqi lives in Kabul, but has nominated herself as a parliamentary candidate for Nangarhar province where she says she has many followers. She has no illusions about the difficulties women face in Nangarhar, a rural and mountainous region in the southeast, bordering Pakistan.

"Female candidates in Nangarhar face security and economic problems. We can neither hold meetings nor go to certain areas and it will be very difficult for some women candidates to launch election campaigns," she said. "There are some women who are conducting their campaigns in burqas."

Since women in more traditional areas are unable to leave the house without their husbands' permission, Sediqi said her campaign will be a long slog of door-to-door visits, trying to reach her natural constituency. But she said that she is determined to stand for a seat so as to be able to defend women's rights as well as serve her country.

RAWA SCHOOL AT KHEWA REFUGEE CAMP

Her eyes were sparkling as she said, "I want to develop a lot of courses to teach local girls their rights and values. I want to go back to Afghanistan and make my country a learning center for all!" The young woman was reeling with excitement, a little overwhelmed, but fully in the moment. She had just marched onstage and received her twelfth class diploma. For the 4,000 residents of the Khewa refugee camp, located on the outskirts of Peshawar, the recently held graduation ceremony of the youth offered a moment of hope. The graduating students presented an inspiring possibility- helping to change the bleak situation faced by Afghans, especially Afghan women.

For the youth, especially school-going girls, life in Afghanistan is characterised by paralysing physical danger. As a recently released report by Amnesty International explained, violence against females in the country is such that "Daily Afghan women are at risk of abduction and rape by armed individuals. The government is doing little to improve their condition." Acts of violence against women are rarely investigated or punished.

Only few schools destroyed during the Taliban-era and subsequent American invasion have been rebuilt, meaning that very few girls have educational institutions near their homes.

Rather than sacrifice the hope of obtaining an education, many girls have decided to remain alone in the refugee camps while their families travel back to Afghanistan. This sacrifice is a testament to just how grim the situation is for women inside Afghanistan. It also means that, despite the accelerating repatriation of the Afghans, there remains a strong need for educational programmes on the Pakistani side of the border. About 70 girls attending school at Khewa are like Feroza, living separately from their families in pursuit of the education and safety their homeland is yet unable to provide. Both the school and its nearby hostel are run by the Revolutionary Association of the Women of Afghanistan (RAWA), a grassroots organisation with programmes throughout Pakistan and Afghanistan.

FUNDRAISING - ONE WOMAN'S PILGRIMAGE

Vickie Smiles walked the famous 800km pilgrimage from the French Pyrenees village of St Jean Pied-de-Port, finishing at the steps of the Cathedral at Santiago de Compostela, with all sponsorship funds going to RAWA. Vickie has collected $3000 so far for RAWA from sponsors of her pilgrimage.
The Institute for War & Peace Reporting (IWPR) supports local journalists at the frontlines of crisis and change. In launching our Women’s Reporting and Dialogue Programme, IWPR looks at a different kind of frontline - the battle women in Islamic countries are waging to define new rights in changing times.

Amid war, revolution and extended political transition, this change may be the most fundamental of all. Longstanding social, political and cultural habits are being challenged. Women are seeking to redefine their roles, in the public sphere as political leaders and active citizens, and in private as equal partners in families with more control over their own lives, livelihoods and bodies. This is a true revolution. There is an enormous amount to be gained, as societies unleash the creative power of half of their populations. But there are also serious risks – resistance and even violent backlash against change, and new forms of exploitation and degradation. The greatest challenge of all may be to define new rights and responsibilities for women while respecting the cultures and the practices of Islam, with all its diversity. We are particularly proud that of some 18 high-profile current or recent projects by IWPR worldwide, 14 have been managed by women. Through this expertise, IWPR is uniquely placed to run such a programme.

IWPR is a practical organisation, and will seek to strengthen the capacity to women to make themselves heard within local media, through regional syndication and internationally via IWPR’s website and electronic publications. The flagship will be a fortnightly electronic publication, Women’s Perspectives.

The activities will focus on women journalists in Afghanistan, Central Asia, Azerbaijan and the North Caucasus - with launch support from the US Department of State. Relevant issues arising in other IWPR country programmes will be brought into the mix, and we hope to be able to continue to expand the remit of the programme, in order to extend and enrich this vital debate. But it is essential to stress that IWPR brings no preconceived solutions. The answers for each society must be worked out within those communities. IWPR’s goal in this project is to help ensure that, in those debates, half of the populations have their say.

HOW YOU CAN HELP
You can contribute enormously to promoting SAWA:
- Pass this newsletter to a friend/neighbour/relative
- Print and/or copy the SAWA leaflet and this newsletter and give to friends, work colleagues, relatives and organisations. Forward it to your address list or through your organisations.
- Encourage others to join SAWA and to check out the award-winning web page:
  www.sawa-australia.org
- Invite a few friends and neighbours or members of a group you belong to, over for morning tea/supper.
- Ask your organisations/employers to make a donation
- Run a fundraiser (some ideas on previous page) or join SAWA as an organisation member
- Make a bequest in your will to Sawa-Australia
